Drug-induced thrombocytopenia is a rare complication following the use of various pharmaceutical agents. On the basis of an increased risk of thromboembolic disease in patients with this complication, thrombocytopenia is usually categorized as "dangerous." Although various drugs have been associated with this complication, many of these agents do not typically induce thrombocytopenia per se. Rather, they only promote the immunologic mechanism leading to thrombocytopenia, such as idiosyncratic drug reactions, immune thrombocytopenic purpura and alloimmunization against platelets. This review discusses several drugs that are most commonly associated with thrombocytopenia as well as non-drug-induced thrombocytopenia, which can be of the immune and non-immune variety. Finally, the treatment of drug-induced thrombocytopenia is discussed, including prevention and therapy.

Restoring a Windows 10 installation backup or user created software backup only requires to restore the ISO file that you saved in the first step. The ISO file is a bootable file, but it is not the restore media file. You have to burn the ISO file in a flash drive to perform a restore. Read this article: How to Create a Bootable Windows ISO File from within a Windows 10 Installation Restore windows image from the ISO file You can find information about the tools used for creating the ISO file in the previous article: How to create Windows 10 ISO file using PowerISO Free tool. When you want to restore an installation created with Windows 10 Home edition, there is no need to save the ISO file because you can just restore the ISO file directly from the image file that is stored in the backup image file (7ZIP format). If you want to restore an installation created with Windows 10 Pro, you will need to save the ISO file because the image file is in.vhd format and the format is not compatible with Windows 10 Home. Q: How to replace a certain character in a string using Lua I want to replace '!' with something else, using the table.gmatch function. The problem is that I need to search for it using strings instead of numbers. So, for example, if the string contains!a I would like to print something else instead of the 'a'. For now I have this code: local table1 = { } for c in "!a" do table1[string.lower(c)] = "xyz" end print(table1["!a"]) But it is printing the table1. A: You can use the gsub function to perform a search and replacement. In your case, if the string contains!a you want to print something else instead of a. Then, the following should work: for c in "!a" do local value, pos = gsub(string, c, "xyz") if value then print(value) end end Q: How do I run my Amazon EC2's instance on us-west-2? In AWS's console, I have 3 AZs listed as us-east-1, us-east-2 and us-west-1. How do I select one of 54b84cb42d
