Dreambox Screenshot # Dreambox Screenshot Q: What is the primary purpose of a fire fighter? I'm starting to teach myself firefighting and rescue techniques using the SERE method. Most of the books I'm using cover it in some type of degree: CEU, EdD, etc. But all of them seem to only focus on keeping people safe, and don't really address their primary role as far as the fire fighter is concerned. In what situations is a Fire Fighter's primary role primarily safety vs situational awareness? A: The primary purpose of a Firefighter is to put out fires that are burning things up (in the United States). Obviously, the safety of the firefighter is a secondary benefit, but without a fire, there isn't really anything to save. For someone on SERE level II (malfunction on a Fire Engine), the first goal is to get to the fire, and second is to put it out quickly, if possible. So a Primary role of the firefighter is to go and put out the fire, get everyone out of the structure. Any form of "situational awareness" would be tertiary, at best. To answer your question a bit better, a firefighter can be qualified as a SAR (Search and Rescue) team, in that they would be likely to be the first responders in any type of emergency, and their primary role is to get people out of dangerous situations, while also providing safety for rescuers (since they aren't there to rescue people, but to get them out of danger). This is a higher level of responsibility than a Firefighter, but a similar emphasis on safety should also apply. Q: How to develop a war file without knowing the class name inside a jar file? I have a java class inside a jar file. Its name is something like coder.java and it does lot of things. How can I find out this jar file path and class name without knowing the name of the jar file? Is there any way to find the name of the jar file and/or class name? A: ClassLoader classname = Thread.currentThread(). 648931e174

To determine the anatomical and visual outcome of percutaneous suprachoroidal removal of subfoveal exudate using sclero-photocoagulation as the primary treatment. This prospective, single-blind, interventional study included 20 eyes with subfoveal cholesterol exudate (20-90 µm) treated with sclero-photocoagulation. Sclero-photocoagulation was performed using a holmium:YAG laser with a spot size of 200 µm and a power of 100 mW (150°/s) for a minimum of 50 s. The number and size of subretinal bleedings were evaluated by fundus examination, and best-corrected visual acuity (BCVA) and central retinal thickness (CRT) were recorded at baseline and at 1, 3 and 6 months after sclero-photocoagulation. Mean size of subretinal bleeding at baseline was 24.0 µm (standard deviation [SD] 9.0, range 15-45 µm). Mean BCVA was 0.54 logarithm of the minimum angle of resolution (logMAR; SD 0.29, range 0.30-0.80 logMAR) at baseline. Three months after sclero-photocoagulation, an increase in BCVA was observed in 10 (50%) eyes and a reduction in seven (35%) eyes. Six months after sclero-photocoagulation, a further increase in BCVA was observed in 14 (70%) eyes and a further decrease in five (25%) eyes. At baseline, mean CRT was 552.0 µm (SD 189.4, range 265-1003 µm). After 3 months, the CRT was 402.5 µm (SD 124.9, range 221-602 µm) and 535.0 µm (SD 171.1, range 253-1034 µm) at 6 months. The mean number of laser applications was 35.8 (SD 15
