Why is zinc more important for human health than iron? The importance of the 'zinc:iron' ratio. An expanding area of research indicates that the specific ratio of the bio-essential metals zinc (Zn) and iron (Fe) influences the synthesis of proteins required for normal growth, development, and tissue repair. The ratio of Zn to Fe appears to regulate the rate of deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) synthesis, amino acid uptake and protein synthesis. The human digestive system is dependent on this ratio in order to maintain proper growth, development, and tissue repair. Studies with children have demonstrated how high the Zn:Fe ratio is in breast milk, showing that this ratio is important for infant health. High Zn:Fe ratios are also found in the blood of premature infants who developed significant nutritional problems. Adults also have higher blood Zn:Fe ratios when a diet low in the 2 elements is consumed. High Zn:Fe ratios are linked to a number of health issues in adults. Normal Zn intake should be maintained at 30 to 45 mg/day, with about
