Berke Tools Keygen

Berke Tools was reviewed by sergey rekorProject Summary/Abstract: Systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) is a chronic systemic autoimmune disease that affects approximately 715,000 individuals in the US. There is no cure for SLE and no biomarkers that reliably predict the development of overt clinical disease. However, SLE is highly variable with regard to disease manifestations, severity, and outcome. We hypothesize that the initial events in lupus are due to a defect in the self-tolerance system that leads to the development of a systemic autoimmune response. In recent studies on MRL.Fas(lpr) mice, we have found several abnormalities of the serum Gc-globulin level (a complement factor that protects against lupus in humans) and the biochemical pathway for the clearance of immunoglobulin G (IgG). The absence of the Gc-globulin in these mice results in an autoimmune phenotype that is very similar to the human lupus. Therefore, we proposed to use these novel mouse models to determine the functions of these complement factors in the development of SLE in mice. We hypothesize that the presence of an IgG autoantibody and immune complexes in sera of MRL.Fas(lpr) mice is caused by a defect in the self-tolerance system that blocks the degradation of IgG and results in high levels of IgG in the serum. We further propose that IgG is tolerized by Gc-globulin, and that this defect in the serum Gc-globulin prevents normal processing of the IgG Fc region to fragments that are required for the clearance of IgG from serum. The overall goal of this proposal is to test these hypotheses by investigating the mechanism of IgG/Gc-globulin-mediated clearance of IgG in MRL.Fas(lpr) mice. This project can be accomplished in two Specific Aims. Aim 1 will determine the mechanisms of Gc-globulin-dependent clearance of IgG in mice. Aim 2 will determine whether enhancing the function of Gc-globulin and IgG leads to a reduction in IgG autoantibodies and serum IgG levels and to a reduction in the development of lupus-like symptoms in MRL.Fas(lpr) mice. Furthermore, since Gc-globulin is a critical component in the homeostasis of Ig
