The PSP Custom Firmware PRO-B10 will work on all PSP models from the original PSP to the PSP Go and even the E,Â .Illustration by Christoph Niemann In July, the International Monetary Fund said in its World Economic Outlook that world-wide growth had slumped to a four-year low of 3.7 percent. U.S. growth, which had recently been running at a 2.5 percent annual pace, had been downgraded to 1.5 percent for 2013 and to a more modest 1.9 percent for 2014. (The IMF would probably be unhappy with China if it made any such prediction; there was no official forecast there.) Though the forecast for 2013 is fairly bleak, the IMF says that things should pick up to 2.8 percent in 2014 as a result of the election of the new, more business-friendly President, Barack Obama. The Obama administration's willingness to engage in fiscal stimulus in 2009 to avoid a full-blown Depression—the longest economic downturn since the Second World War—has helped to keep U.S. growth healthy, the IMF says. But it has also set up the Administration's successor to feel pressure to cut interest rates because growth is slowing. The latest such move by the Federal Reserve occurred on January 31st, and it was followed by a statement from the Fed's leadership that monetary policy was "accommodative." The statement was ambiguous—the monetary base was actually rising—but, in his public remarks, Chairman Ben Bernanke implied that, notwithstanding the fact that U.S. unemployment has fallen all the way to 6.7 percent, the central bank thought that the economy was in danger of stalling. President Obama has already said that if his party loses the midterm elections, this will be the "last chance" for him to push through the controversial legislation that he has wanted for so long. The IMF has good reason to think that the American recession is over. It expects U.S. growth to rebound to 3.6 percent in 2014, and then to 3.9 percent in 2015. Meanwhile, the global economy is still struggling with the aftermath of the financial crisis of 2008; last year, the IMF says that global growth will be about 2 percent.
