for maximum realism and has a good kneeling area, i rigged the door to open outwards and down. i can get one of my real planes and remove the door or take the hinges from my other planes, then try that. as far as i have seen, there is no terrain destructible, but there is model destruction. which is great too! now dont get me wrong, the aircraft is very sturdy and would survive most of the bullet damage in the tourneo, but to add some realism, we could have some small parts break off or fall off. this would probably require a bit of programming, but would be very nice to have. oh, and if anyone has any ideas on that, please let me know! wouldnt say it is mission critical, but atleast the new fuel does not flow out of the side of the tank like in the l-39c.. or so the manual says. apparently this is a former russian plane, but quite a long way from there. i think it is quite important that this aircraft was used in very cool games in one way or another. here we have a helicopter simulator with a jet train in it. why not have a third sim, simulating a helicopter with jet convertor. for example: the sky masters in the uk have a helicopter sim with the different modes being as different planes. there is also

fsx with metaltek simulations, which is the best fsx helicopter simulation out there. the heli has a mission mode which can give you 10 missions to go out and make sure that you get your helicopter ready for the real one. so we can now have a helicopter with a mission to fly a helicopter with a jet on it, which is better than a jet and a helicopter. it would also be cool to have a name for hush-hush "military" aircraft. perhaps using this aircraft type. i would love to see the engine light up under full power of the jet engines and make a quite low beat/sound. anyway, thanks for the great aircraft!
