IMPERIUM is a bestseller with an average of ten lines in the Editions numbering. This game already has more than 1 million units sold, so surely you don't have to worry about player saturation. We are all very excited for Imperium III, which is the sequel to Imperium. It's so much better if you can play with a friend on the same board. You will be able to observe how the other player uses his map, so you will understand that you should use his location to find strategic points and that you should be prepared for a surprise attack on some city or another. Some cities do not care about the declaration of war, so you might be surprised to see your enemies, when you meet them, and have to face them with a weak position. This aspect of the game is very interesting. This is the entire history of the Roman Empire as narrated by the leader of the Roman Empire in the game, written in X and Y. This is not your typical and repetitive "builder", but a complete game in which you'll have to lead your troops and train them for battles against other empires. The graphics are fully 3D, with great details, as is the amazing terrains, complete with some RPG elements, although it is not interactive, it is useful to explore the cities and terrain that you will be conquering. In Imperium III, you must conquer all cities. In Imperium II, you were only able to conquer Rome, however, now you have the option of conquering all the other cities. Create your own empire, or will you simply use one of the available Imperials? In any case, you'll have to be very selective with the cities that you conquer because the defending is very powerful. 5ec8ef588b
