Red Giant PluralEyes 4.1.1

The PluralEyes team has always ensured that getting into the new interface isn't that difficult. All the functions are still there, they just got rearranged a bit for PluralEyes 3. Take, for instance, the import window, which is now clearly broken into sections. PluralEyes 3 also added a preview window. That's nice, because if you're like me you're more comfortable looking through images of synced shots instead of inside your NLE. Both previews have been smartened up to better match your tastes, but no different than previous versions. Plus a lot of bugfixes. If you're familiar with previous versions of PluralEyes then you should notice a couple of features here not added before. The ability to use any IOFF clip as a sync clip was one, and the support for multiple timelines was another. This last feature is especially nice in cases where youre working in an NLE thats set up to edit multiple projects at once. The bigger news here is that Red Giant PluralEyes v4.1.7 is Win only. Once again, the PluralEyes team recognizes that Mac users get a lot of value from the product, and that their needs are different than their Windows counterparts. It can't be easy to program a plugin for, say, your favorite non-linear editor, plug it in, and then all of a sudden you're not allowed to work on the Mac. It makes perfect sense to limit the software to Windows, and, I would guess, Mac users can understand that. So, if you're an Animator making primarily videos for the web, you might want to avoid this version, as it doesn't have Mac support.

Also, if you're a user that uses PluralEyes to animate for a non-MOG/MDG format like AfterEffects, you'll like the ability to send layered files or other exported files out to PluralEyes. Now you can do the import from your edited master and directly into PluralEyes, and you dont have to export out the clip first.
