This review focuses on biodegradable polymers used for sustained delivery of anti-inflammatory agents. In order to generate suitable dosage forms with tunable drug release profiles, various biodegradable polymers were used for the design of controlled release vehicles. Designing such systems is a challenging task, especially for delivery of drugs with poor pharmacokinetics or physical stability. Development of such dosage forms has started in the early 1970s and has progressed rapidly since. In this review, polylactide (PLA), polyglycolide (PGA), poly(lactide-co-glycolide) (PLGA), poly(lactide-co-glycolide)-polyethylene glycol (PLGA-PEG) copolymer, poly(lactide-co-glycolide)-poly(ethylene glycol)-polyethylene glycol (PLGA-PEG-PEG) copolymer, polycaprolactone (PCL), poly(ethylene-co-vinyl alcohol) (EVAL), poly(lactide acid-co-glycolic acid) (PLGA) and poly(hydroxybutyrate-co-hydroxyvalerate) (PHBV) are reviewed, and the various biodegradable polymers are explained with respect to molecular weight, branching degree, biodegradability, the nature of the additives, drug loading, drug release and the fate of the drug delivery system after administration. In addition, the possible applications of biodegradable polymers are discussed. The potential of biodegradable polymers for delivery of anti-inflammatory agents is addressed, including applications in ocular and gastrointestinal drug delivery.H Y H D H A H D H A D H A D H H H H A H D H D H D H
