The Swiss tennis star's clothing brand, Stilnovo, and other sports brands including Nike are working together to promote the French Open, which begins on May 26. "We are re-affirming the close affinity between Stilnovo and the French Open and our players, who today are the stars of tennis," Stilnovo general manager Jacques Pohuneau said. "We are convinced this association will give rise to memorable nights, against the backdrop of the highest standard in sports. We can't wait to welcome everyone to Roland Garros." "This association strengthens our presence in France, among our athletes, fans, partners and new audiences, and makes us dream of a wonderful future." Federer, who lost to Britain's Andy Murray
