Currently I'm using a trigger that I wrote when insert data to the table which contains the foreign key. So first I check to make sure that there is no row in this other table, then I insert the row. Is this a good way of doing this? Does the dbms support a something like check constraint that automatically enforces this rule? A: If you're using MySQL, you could rely on the INFORMATION_SCHEMA as described in this answer: Otherwise, based on your description, the solution is to use a BEFORE INSERT TRIGGER. Q: Passing string which is not null or empty Now this is a somewhat "traditional" way of trying to pass a string to a function. In a given function, I need to be able to accept a string. I don't want to accept an empty string but I don't want to accept null either because if I pass null to a function, the function will return the default value "". Is there anyway of setting this up better? public void OnLoad(object sender, EventArgs args) { MyFunction(args.ToString()); } I'm not worried about what this function does, just that it accepts a string. A: You can use one of the overloads of Paramaterized. // A string was passed in MyFunction("A string was passed in"); // A nullable string was passed in MyFunction(default(string)) // A string was passed in, and is not null or an empty string MyFunction("A string was passed in", "A string was passed in"); // A string was passed in MyFunction("A string was passed in"); class Program { static void Main(string[]
